This informative and highly interactive, training will bring together women and men in local and regional leadership capacities, to discuss and plan how to work together to design and implement lasting social change through effective gender violence prevention.

Jackson Katz is an American educator, filmmaker and author. He is co-creator of the gender violence prevention and education program entitled “Mentors in Violence Prevention”, and is internationally recognized for his ground breaking work in gender violence prevention education in schools, the sports culture and the military.

This event is sponsored by:

“We need more men with the guts, the courage, the strength, and the moral integrity to break our complicit silence and challenge each other to stand with women, not against them.”
